The current bibliography started as an assignment funded by the GIZ Support to Land Reform project. It represents an expansion of a short bibliography developed by the author with inputs from Robin Sherbourne, which was published in J. Hunter (Ed.), (2004). Who should own the land? Analyses and views on land reform and the land question in Namibia and Southern Africa. Windhoek: Konrad Adenauer Stiftung / Namibia Institute for Democracy.

The bibliography benefited from and integrated information provided by the GIZ Support to Land Reform project in the form of a short dedicated bibliography on the Flexible Land Tenure System prepared by D. Robben (Robben, 2014) as well as an internal Book Monitoring spreadsheet.

Permission by the Namibia Institute for Democracy and Robin Sherbourne to use the published bibliography for this update as well permission granted by GIZ Support to Land Reform to publish this bibliography as an ILMI Working Paper, is gratefully acknowledged.

While great care was taken to be as accurate as possible in providing bibliographical detail and following the APA Citation Guide, the text is likely to reveal from time to time that the compiler is not a professional librarian. Mss. Anastasia Chimwandi and Åse Christensen and Mr. Guillermo Delgado have provided valuable assistance in proof reading the manuscript. Needless to say, any factual mistakes and inaccuracies are the sole responsibility of the compiler.

Preface

This bibliography on land reform after 1990 started as a short assignment funded by GIZ Support to Land Reform. It responded to a realisation that a relatively large body of research and many publications on land reform in Namibia existed, but were scattered and hence inaccessible to most people. It is a first attempt to list and publish as much detail as possible on published and unpublished material with a bearing on land reform since 1990. It excludes newspaper and magazine articles. As the urban land question is gradually increasing in prominence, literature on this topic is presented in a separate section for ease of reference.

Although the bibliography is quite comprehensive, it is not complete. These shortcomings notwithstanding, it is hoped that it will be of assistance to researchers and in particular students, in identifying sources for their research. Many entries consist of what is commonly called grey literature. This refers to reports and papers that have not been published in peer reviewed journals, but contain valuable information for research purposes, and can contribute to the development of informed debates on land reform in Namibia.

ILMI is delighted to publish this bibliography in its Working Paper Series. It sees this as a small contribution to encourage and facilitate research on land reform in Namibia. Perhaps more ambitiously, this bibliography may serve as a starting point to collect the titles listed in order to strengthen the resource centre on land administration and land reform.
